MRS. TATUM TELLS HOW SHE TRIED TO HOLD HER HUSBAND

Did Everything She Could, She Says Poutingly, to Keep Him at Home.

(Special to The Evening World.)

COURT HOUSE, MINEOLA, L. I., Jan. 2.—Mrs. Mary Jane Tatum resumed her ordeal of cross-examination to-day in the suit before Justice Crane, which involves herself and Jacob ("Mr. Jack") Ottman on the one hand and her husband and Mrs. Nellie A. Chalmers, formerly Mrs. Tatum's best friend, on the other.

Singling in a schoolgirl voice which fits as badly with her acknowledged twenty-nine years as do her schoolgirl carriage and corsetless tight frocks, Mrs. Tatum continued to fence with Terence J. McManus, counsel for her husband.

Mr. Tatum regarded her with a broad and almost taunting smile while she told how she tried to keep him in her home after his affection began to show signs of exhaustion. He insisted, she said, that she live in another hotel; when she refused, he moved. He offered her the Great Neck country place, but said he would live in a "small place." She found a "small place" and he took the ten-acre place on Manhasset Bay. When she went to the country home, he took to his yacht and went out to bear what the wild waves were saying.

Living alone at the Great Northern Hotel, she went to her husband's office and thence to lunch at the Arkwright Club. But when she tried to get him to her apartments in the hotel "for a nice little talk," she said he rebelled. "We'll talk on the street, Mink," said Mr. Tatum, using his pet name for her. "At first though," she assured Mr. McManus, "when we were married in 1909 he was perfectly lovely to me. I'd go back to him right now if he'd be like that again."

Mr. Tatum leaned back in his chair, peering under his palm at her and shook with joy. "And yet," the fair defendant said, in the tone of a schoolgirl telling teacher, "When I said I was just going to Great Neck anyway, he said he'd have me thrown off the place."

Through the consideration of Justice Crane yesterday Mrs. Tatum had a night in which to think over the letter with which Mr. McManus surprised her and her counsel, Max D. Steiner, yesterday.

It was a note to Mrs. Chalmers, then best friend, and now co-respondent, telling Mrs. Chalmers how to explain Mrs. Tatum's movements should friend husband Tatum appear unexpectedly. Mrs. Tatum yesterday said she wrote the letter, then she said it looked queer to her. Then she said she never wrote the note. So the Judge said he thought the witness was nervous and was entitled to a chance for a rest from the enervating cross-fire of Messrs. McManus and Steiner.

Justice Crane started proceedings by ordering the note withdrawn from evidence until it was proved to be in the handwriting of Mrs. Tatum.

Mrs. Tatum was dressed from her gray gaitered little boots to her head in black tulle. She lost the semblance to a shy little girl under the sarcasm of Mr. McManus and answered back with sharpness and a certain mature, savage restraint.

Mrs. Tatum said she rented an apartment early in 1914 at No. 63 Central Park West from "Mr. Jack" Ottman and a syndicate of his card-playing friends at the suggestion of Ottman's father.

"Mr. and Mrs. Jones, Miss Horatense Jones, Miss Bessie Jones," Mrs. Tatum said indignantly, "visited the apartment as often as the Ottmans."

When she gave up the apartment Mrs. Tatum said that she went to a roadhouse at Glenhead with the Ottmans, Mr. Jack and Mr. Phil. They motored back to the Empire Hotel in New York where she occupied a suite adjoining that of "Mr. Jack." Mr. Philip was merely a visitor of his brother in the Empire.

Mrs. Tatum denied to Mr. Steiner that she ever told any of the witnesses to lie in her defense. She never told anybody she meant to get a divorce and marry Ottman.

Mrs. Tatum closed her examination by saying that she did not want a divorce, but was urging her husband's intimacy with Mrs. Nellie Chalmers only as proof of her right to alimony on the ground of neglect.

J. H. Ottman, the co-respondent, made a formal denial of the charges involving him in wrongdoing with Mrs. Tatum.

The case for the defense was closed at half past 2 o'clock. Justice Crane ruled that no evidence had been shown that Mrs. Chalmers was guilty of any misconduct. All charges to that effect were withdrawn from the jury.

Three-quarters of an hour each was allotted to counsel for summing up. Justice Crane announced that he would charge the jury and ask for a verdict to-morrow morning.

CROPSEY ACCUSED BY JUDGE DIKE TO GRAND JURY

Brooklyn Prosecutor Tells Why He Refused to Ask Tiger's Extradition.

The "public official" concerning whose acts Judge Dike of the Brooklyn County Court submitted evidence to the Grand Jury last Monday. Moved to-day to be District Attorney Cropsey of Kings County. This revelation was made known by Cropsey himself through the medium of a public statement.

Judge Dike was the one held up by Cropsey as responsible for the failure of justice against Edward M. Groat in the long-drawn Union Bank cases and by implication came under the heading of Cropsey's arraignment of "the wicked judges."

According to Cropsey's statement, the matter laid by Dike before the Grand Jury was the complaint of Monros M. Goldstein, a lawyer, of No. 25 Second Avenue, Manhattan, that the District Attorney refused to ask the Governor for extradition papers against Frank Tiger, at present in Milwaukee and wanted in Brooklyn to face the charge of abandonment.

"In view of the criticism I have made of Judge Dike," said Cropsey in his statement, "I can understand his motive in publicly calling to the attention of the Grand Jury this trivial matter relating to the District Attorney's office."

The statement continued that Goldstein had written his letter of complaint to Judge Dike on Dec. 3. Since, as Cropsey went on to say, extradition for abandonment is very often a prelude to the legal attempt to gain alimony and Monros M. Goldstein does a big business in handling divorces, it is open to doubt whether or not the lawyer in this case had private reasons for his grudge against the District Attorney for his failure to act.

Under the provisions of the law relating to extradition for abandonment, Cropsey said, the District Attorney must certify to the Governor that he has sufficient evidence to justify belief in a conviction.

The District Attorney hesitates to entail the expense of extradition in such cases upon the county, partly through knowledge that extradition may be demanded to serve a private end of alimony and partly because in many instances where extradition has been accomplished the Judge hearing the case has let the defendant off with a suspended sentence.

Judge Dike had so acted once in the past year, Cropsey declared. In the Tiger case Cropsey did not feel, so he said, that the facts warranted an appeal for extradition.

CLEARY CHARGES PLOT TO DRIVE HIM OUT OF POLITICS

Ex-Town Clerk, Acquitted of Murder of Son-in-Law, Accuses Five Men.

William V. Cleary, former Town Clerk of Haverstraw, who recently was acquitted of the murder of his son-in-law, Eugene M. Newman, declared to-day steps which are being taken to drive him out of politics in Rockland County are the result of a plot by a small ring of office-seekers in Haverstraw.

Cleary named five men as being the instigators of the fight on him. Cleary's wife and daughter will sail Saturday on a Southern trip.

Cleary said efforts were being made to inject religion into the fight on him, and that the men who were opposing him were "bigots of a dangerous type."

"I was misquoted and misrepresented there," he said. "I give my daughter full credit for having saved me."

HORSE AND A TAXI TURN 6TH AVENUE INTO RACE COURSE

"Irish Lad" Wins Fast Heat From Car Despite Handicap of Hack.

Results at New York. First race, won by "Irish Lad," gay gelding, attached to light hack. Owner, John Milligan. Taxicab "Hopalong" owner, John Stevens, second. Distance, about two and a half miles. Track fast, but a little cluttered with vehicles and pedestrians. Judge, Policeman Lennon, West Thirtieth Street Station. Purse, a yellow-backed bill, denomination known only to Milligan. Betting, even money that the gay gelding would make a getaway.

The race was started last night at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Thirtieth Street. Milligan was fondly stroking "Irish Lad," telling him how good he was and all that sort of thing, when three Englishmen, hilarious over the war in Europe, came into the as-a-may-say paddock, and also began admiring the gay gelding (fastened to the hack).

"Rather rippin', what?" one asked, carefully brushing the animal's fur the right way. "Ever race him?"

Now, Milligan has always believed "Irish Lad" could "go some if he was pushed," but before he had time to answer, the three Britons climbed aboard his vehicle.

"We'll just tool him about the park awhile," one of them said, as he gathered up the reins.

"You'll do no such thing," Milligan replied. "If there's any tooling to be done, I'll do it."

But the Englishman who had the reins gave a crack of the whip which sent "Irish Lad" away in a single leap.

Up Sixth Avenue went the quietest, the three passengers, the horse and the hack. "Irish Lad" crouched low and let himself out. He was being pushed by the taxicab, to catch the horse.

Milligan, as he saw his pet vanishing into the night, leaped aboard the good taxicab "Hopalong" and urged Stevens, the driver, to catch the horse.

Up the avenue to Forty-second Street, thence to Broadway and back again to the starting point raced "Irish Lad," the taxi close behind. Twice was the track covered, with the gay gelding still at the forefront. At last at the starting point Milligan leaped out of the taxi and said "Whoa!" It worked like magic. "Irish Lad" dug his toes in and slid to a stop. The race was at an end.

Then along came the policeman, there was an adjournment to the West Thirtieth Street Station, the Englishmen "made it all right" with Milligan and another racing event had passed into history.

SWINDLER GETS MONEY IN NAME OF THE WORLD

"C. F. Hogan" Collects From Lenox Avenue Storekeepers for Imaginary Soup Kitchen.

A man calling himself C. F. Hogan, and claiming to represent The World, has persuaded uptown storekeepers to give him sums of money, from twenty-five cents up, toward the establishing of a World Soup Kitchen.

The man is a potty swindler and has no connection with The World. Hogan entered the store of M. Weinstein, at No. 645 Lenox Avenue, yesterday and solicited money for the alleged "soup kitchen."

He said he was canvassing the entire neighborhood and was later going to Yorkville on the same mission. He added the soup kitchen was to be opened at Olympic Field and that all merchants contributing twenty-five cents or over would thus insure the printing of their business cards on the back page of the Sunday World.

Sidney Irenbach, one of Weinstein's clerks, suspected that the man was a crook and notified The World. He described Hogan as tall, heavily built, clean shaven and about twenty-eight years old.
